Whittington-Long House
Crisfield
private

c.1870

Standing on the south side of Main Street in uptown Crisfield, the Whittington-Long house is one of the earliest and most prominent houses to remain standing in the central business district. The two-story ell-shaped main house is dominated by a colossal Tuscan columned portico. The enclosed front porch and the brick flower shop were added around 1924.

The original owner of this Main Street house is not exactly clear, but the house appears to have been built around 1870 with reference to an improvement on "Lot No.9" in a transfer of land between William Roach, Thomas J. Dixon, William F. Veasey, grantors, and Harriet A. Whittington, grantee. The one-half acre lot, "purchased by the said Veasey of said Roach and Dixon, but not heretofore conveyed, which said lot is shown as Lot No. 9 upon the plat of said Roach and Dixon, together with all the improvements thereon," was sold in May of 1872 to Harriet Whittington for $1,500. (LW13/431). This large sum for a one-half acre lot suggests the property had been improved at the time of transfer. Harriet and her husband, Isaac T. Whittington, lived in the house until 1899 when the property was sold to George W. Long (OTB 26/96). George W. Long occupied the property until 1911, when the court-appointed heirs sold the house and lot to Alida Woodland (59/458). The current owners, the Corbins, purchased the property from Alida Woodland in March of 1938 (JMT 115/529).

Whittington - Long House Description

The Whittington-Long house is located at 315 West Main Street in the center of downtown Crisfield, Somerset County, Maryland. The c. 1870 two-story frame house faces north with the principal roof oriented on an east/west axis.

The two-story, three-bay frame house is supported by a minimal brick foundation and covered with narrow weatherboard siding. The medium pitched hip roof is covered with asphalt shingles. Projecting from the front of the house is a colossal Tuscan columned gable-front portico and to the rear is an ell-plan service wing. Twin brick chimneys rise from the main block to flank the center hall. In 1924 a single-story brick flower shop was attached to the northeast corner of the frame house, and the first floor porch was enclosed.

The north three-bay elevation is dominated by the colossal two-story Tuscan columned portico. Fishscale shingles cover the tympanum, which is pierced by a small square single-pane window. The first floor of the house is totally covered with the enclosed shed roof porch and the brick flower shop. The second floor has a sidelighted entrance that once opened onto a second floor porch. The door is framed by a fluted surround with bullseye corner blocks. Located to each side is a single 6/6 sash window. The base of the roof is finished with a simple board soffit. The flower shop is a flat-roofed rectangular brick building with large display windows and a parapet roof. The parapet front has a shallow pointed arch.

The east side elevation is two bays deep with six over six sash windows on each floor. A narrow brick chimney stack rises from the south end of the service wing. Attached to the south and west sides of the rear wing are early to mid twentieth century additions.

The interior has been generally remodeled in the last sixty years, but some Victorian period woodwork including a turned newel post and turned balusters survive intact.

SIGNIFICANCE

The Whittington-Long house is one of the earliest and most prominent nineteenth century houses to remain in central downtown Crisfield. The two-story Tuscan columned portico dominates the otherwise plain center hall frame house. The c. 1924 brick flower shop and enclosed shed porch obscure the first floor elevation and significantly compromise the nineteenth century dwelling.

HISTORY AND SUPPORT

The original owner of this Main Street house is not clear, but the house appears to have been built c. 1870 with reference to an improvement on "Lot No. 9" in a transfer of land between William Roach, Thomas J. Dixon, and William F. Veasey, grantors and Harriet A. Whittington, grantee. The one-half acre lot, "purchased by the said Veasey of said Roach and Dixon, but not heretofore conveyed, which said lot is shown as Lot No. 9 upon the plat of said Roach and Dixon, together with all improvements thereon," was sold in May of 1872 to Harriet Whittington for $1,500.00 (LW 13/431). This large sum for a one-half acre lot suggests the property had been improved at this time. Harriet and her husband, Isaac T. Whittington, lived in the house until 1899 when the property was sold to George W. Long (OTB 26/96). George W. Long occupied the property until 1911, when the court-appointed heirs sold the house and lot to Alida Woodland (59/458). The Corbins purchased the property from Alida Woodland in March of 1938 (JMT 115/529).
